Abstract

In the article, domestic violence is the physical, mental, sexual, or financial violence that one spouse or other person in an intimate relationship inflicts on the other. Typically, this type of violence involves an attempt by one party to control the lives of other family members. Victims of domestic violence are most often women or young children, but men and the elderly are also perceived to be victims.

Keywords: Family, human race, upbringing of children, domestic violence, physiologically insults, discriminates, organizations.

Introduction

All reforms carried out in our country are aimed at the noble realization of human interests, the creation of a prosperous life for our people. The successful solution of these tasks in the short term depends not only on our current state, but also on the stable and conscious activity of each member of the society in which we live.

"Family is sacred to me. His sanctity is that no matter where he works, no matter who he is, there will never be results if he does not pay special attention to upbringing in the family, environment in the family, honesty in the family, attitude, upbringing. That is why I pay so much attention to the upbringing of my children. I have a different approach to each of my children and grandchildren. I know the individual character of each of my grandchildren, I know their dreams and desires."

Today, there is no doubt that the unique prestige of the family is a reality of great social significance. The family is the basic cell and social unit of society. The happiness and well-being of every family is ultimately a condition for the stability, prosperity and well-being of society[1].

The family is of great importance not only as a factor in the continuation of the human race, but also as a place for educating members of society, especially the younger generation, on the basis of the idea of national independence. In this regard, the Center for Public Opinion Research "Social Thought" conducted a survey on "Society and the family: the spiritual and moral world." The purpose of the study was to study the attitude of Uzbek citizens to family and family relations, national values and the role of the community in family life, the restoration of stable traditions in this area, the level of legal literacy of the population. Residents of Samarkand city districts and villages took part in the survey.

"What is the main role of the modern family in the life of society?" 47.5% of respondents answered that the family is the basis of society and the state.

21.2% of respondents believe that the family is responsible for the upbringing of the younger generation. 11.2 percent of respondents believe that the family helps to strengthen stability and security in the country. 7.9 percent of people believe that the role of the family is in procreation.

Respondents on the importance of the family in everyone's life expressed the following views: "it is necessary for the continuation of the generation, the birth and upbringing of children" (63.2%), "the family is the stronghold of man, gives him confidence in life" (28.8%), "family is necessary to provide for a person as he or she gets older" (4.9 percent).

The fulfillment of the duties of the family is an important condition for the preservation of the historical continuity of generations, the development of the individual and society, the development of society.

However, in the family, which is supposed to prepare the individual for independent living, to guide him, the occurrence of various events that sometimes lead to crime among family members is attracting the attention of the state and society.

Domestic violence is the physical, mental, sexual, or financial abuse of a spouse or other person in an intimate relationship against the other. Typically, this type of violence lies in the desire of one party to maintain control over the lives of other family members.

Victims of domestic violence are most often women or young children, but there are also victims among men and the elderly. Here are some common types of domestic violence[3]:

Husband beats, mentally discriminates against his wife, accuses her offspring due to marital status or actions of parents or relatives, rapes her husband, forces her to satisfy his sexual needs in unnatural ways, or sexually discriminates (physiologically insults, discriminates, not having sex, to betray his wife), financial constraints, not giving money, resisting a woman from studying or working, and so on.

A person's upbringing conditions, the criminogenic environment in the family, are not directly related to his or her crime. Because the environment in the family does not lead to the formation of a person in it, the emergence of certain characteristics and the commission of a crime. However, a person raised in a troubled family is more likely to "respond" with actions that could lead to criminal charges against others in a particular situation.

Although violence is a multifaceted concept and subject of debate, all researchers agree that crimes committed through violence are crimes against a person's life and liberty, health, and inviolability that are most valuable to him or her.

In the legal sense, a family can be defined as a set of persons connected to each other by mutual obligations (spiritual, moral, legal) arising from legal facts (marriage, adoption, kinship).

Family relations are a more complex system of relations than marriage, which embodies not only the couple, but also their children, relatives.

Therefore, family members include persons who live together or separately, who live or have previously lived in a legally or unregistered marriage, relatives on the correct family tree or side tree, mixed or non-mixed relatives. Adopted children are also recognized as family members if they are materially, mentally or otherwise dependent on a family member as a result of their inability to care for themselves independently.

According to our sociological research, 80% of the victims of various crimes committed in the family were women and children. Children, women, the elderly, the disabled, or other persons with physical disabilities accounted for more than a quarter of all deaths as a result of domestic violence crimes.

Women perform many tasks in the family and these responsibilities addition is very complicated. Women are partners in the family union, paid and unpaid mistresses and mothers in the household.

Children the heavy burden of care is also often borne by them. The fact that women perform these duties is especially important for family members children's health, level of education, material well-being is a key determinant, as well as women to children they are also role models for performing certain tasks as they grow older serve as a template[2].

Cases of domestic violence against women by both parents and spouses are common in society. These is a serious indication of the existing gender disparities. To women relative violence is often in the form of sexual and domestic violence, murder against them on the basis of alcoholism, drug addiction, sadism and as well as in the delivery of severe injuries of varying degrees manifests itself in other forms of physical and mental violence[4].

The family is a separate front, in which gender equality issues or, more precisely, gender inequality is very acute, often - in a very painful way manifests and resolves them in the same family than elsewhere difficult, at least, difficult to solve using the law. Practice indicates that the woman is established at the level of laws and the principle of equality between men is always applied to life and in some places it may not be applied at all possible. That is why gender equality in the family a mechanism for consolidating ideas and putting them into practice strengthening is very important.

Our analysis of neighborhoods has shown that the role of fathers in child rearing is declining. This is especially true in the family how important it is for upbringing. The father is also the head of the family Along with economic support, the upbringing of children is also empty are responsible for spending their time productively. We directly visited 158 families and studied their attitudes to child rearing and work experience [5].

Some modern, active, the leisure time of the children of exemplary families is meaningful and useful pay special attention to their conduct. This work is done in advance, with the help of parents and children. In some families, parents send their children for a day, or a week teach them to plan an agenda.

That is, with their children setting reasonable pedagogical agendas in consultation they do. For example, "Oh, my son, my daughter, tell me, How are you going to spend this week? " to create their own weekly work regimes, they suggested they have taken a very restrained, psychologically correct approach in reviewing the regime together, supporting its preferred directions, or editing it according to circumstances[6].

In the pedagogical relationship between parents and young people, "time density" syndrome. The second shortcoming is that parents do not pay attention to the positive qualities in their children, they are not encouraged and use the concept of "education" mainly to correct the negative qualities in young people.

This eventually creates a spiritual gap between adolescents and parents to be, other sources to satisfy the interests of the teenager leads to the search. This is one of the reasons why teenagers fall into the "traps" of religious extremism and terrorism in today's highly developed Internet it is happening[7].

One of our experts, Candidate of Pedagogical Sciences, Associate Professor of Andijan State University Z.Azimova on March 14, 2012 In an interview with us, he analyzed the role of the computer in the encounter of foreign ideas with teenagers as follows: "Parents, my child should be no less than someone else's child, for a certain amount of money we will buy a computer. Our child stays unattended in front of the computer for hours. That's why we now use the Internet. The majority of those who sleep are young people. But there should be control when using the internet. Because terrorism is religious there are many sites that spread extremism. The spiritual connection to them is tragic leading to consequences. Some "discriminatory" interlocutors are teenagers targeting, that is, influencing his spiritual life[8].

When when our child got into the street of crime "Why is that was it Who is to blame for this? " we begin to look for the culprit. In fact most Is the parent the main culprit? When asked to answer, we comfort ourselves by saying, "I'm working for my child, I've provided everything, I'm doing my parenting." But it was too late will be".

Interviews with families have the following conclusions appeared:

- raising children of parents in families or not only in the upbringing, but in the upbringing of the child by the parents we also need to check their ability;
- at least twice a year for each family of community activists targeted entry and interviewing should be facilitated;
- Go abroad once a month with parents whose child has gone abroad to talk about the child in the hand;
- Conducting interviews with citizens traveling abroad, especially young people, with the participation of experts and recording the results, and this strict control of the issue;
- young people on the verge of marriage (separate girl, separate boy) to be interviewed by a psychologist (in which both young people worldview is studied) introduction;
- Compulsory training seminars for parents once a year introduction of the organization;
- Prepared a text entitled "Appeal to parents" (which includes advice and recommendations on religious education, a call to awareness finds), to ensure that delivery to each apartment (Appendix)

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, although there are more than forty non-governmental non-profit organizations in the Republic of Uzbekistan dealing with family, youth and women's issues, the population is not aware of these organizations. We believe that the wider use of the media will be effective in raising their awareness.
